Hi Tim,

Everything going well, looking forward to a few days off for the holidays. Hope you and your family have happy holidays as well.

Thanks for looking into Hickman. I'll be interested in finding out what sort of air permit they get/need (I'd guess most chicken farms don't have enough emissions to be title V sources, but I don't have a lot of experience looking into chicken farms).

Wanted to send you a copy of the Drake 114 which I think goes out in the mail today. For snowflake, it appears we may have gotten the owner wrong and so we may need to send another info request (well, same one, but to the right party) in the new year.

Feel free to let me know if you have questions,

Matt

Matt,

Hope everything is going well. Just a quick status check in, ADEQ is investigating jurisdiction issues right now regarding potential permitting for this facility, should that be required. The problem right now is who has jurisdiction over the facility, MCAQD or ADEQ, due to past issues with MCAQD and the agricultural sector. Once we determine who will take point, we'll be able to move forward quickly with a resolution, which I suspect will be in the next week or so.

If you have any questions in the meantime, feel free to give me a call or send me an email.

Tim

Subject: FW: Hickman's Egg Factory in Tonopah, Arizona; Request for Investigation and Enforcement as Needed

Hi Tim,

Hope your holidays are going great so far. We're still plugging away at the confidentiality agreement and making some finishing changes on our SRF draft and we'll hopefully share both soon.

We got this from Don't waste Arizona. Have you looked into this facility?

Thanks,

Matt

Re: Hickman's Egg Factory in Tonopah, Arizona; Request for Investigation and Enforcement as Needed

Don't Waste Arizona is very concerned about the Hickman's egg factory being constructed and operated in Tonopah, Arizona. The facility is taking extraordinary measures to avoid any sort of regulatory scrutiny, and doesn't even have any building permits for any of its construction, much less any other environmental permits. It has deliberately worked to create a dearth of information about its on-site activities, but local residents have documented some of what appears to be going on at the facility, which has commenced construction and is a phased-in operation. It already is operating while continuing its construction.

There already is a Hickman's egg factory in Arlington, Arizona, which has some of the requisite environmental permits in place or in process, but this Tonopah facility will eventually hold many millions more chickens than the Arlington facility, and yet appears to have none.

It appears that the Hickman's Tonopah facility will need to have a number of environmental permits as there are or will be a number of industrial operations at this facility, so it appears that it will need many, including at a minimum:

- dust control permits;
- permits for milling and grinding feed;
- permits for the grinding and processing of millions of chickens (disposal);
- permits regarding the control of particulates, which include ammonia and other chemicals emanating from its enormous barns;
- permits for the milling, grinding and processing of manure and chicken carcasses into pellets for sale.

There is also no evidence of any specific permit, permit application/request, Notice of Intent (NOI), or any other type of notice/document regarding the facility's compliance with the state/federal AZPDES program; a Nutrient Management Plan to protect groundwater from nitrate and nitrite pollution; and/or any Notice of Intent (NOI) filed by Hickman to fall under the AZPDES General permit for CAFO's;

The Arlington facility generates a stench that stings the nose and eyes for quite a distance from its fence line, and it seems that the Tonopah facility will generate a stench with a wider range, which appears to also violate the AZ SIP regarding odors.

Don't Waste Arizona requests EPA Region 9 commence an investigation into the facility's compliance with all environmental permitting requirements within EPA's jurisdiction, and to take whatever enforcement actions are warranted by the result of this investigation.

If Don't Waste Arizona can assist in any way with more information, please do not hesitate to contact me.
